300 Technology Square is the largest class A office building, with over 175,000 square feet of office space, in the one million square foot Technology Square complex in Cambridge, MA.

The project, located on the former site of the Polaroid headquarters, was construction managed by Beacon Skanska Construction Co. High tech companies are attracted to the complex because of its proximity to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Campus.

300 Technology Square, developed by Beacon Capital Partners of Boston, MA, is clad with 572 architectural precast concrete wall panels. The panels have a light sand blast finish with a color resembling a light limestone.
